

DARYLE GRIFFIN

Daryle comes from one of the most well-known and well-respected sports families in Ohio. His long-time association with Brightway's founder, Kara Bright, dates back to 1973 when Daryle was still a student at Kent State University and their involvement with the Fellowship of Christian Athletes (FCA). After graduating, Daryle went on to serve for over 32 years in various leadership positions at AT&T, finally retiring in April of 2007. Throughout his professional career Daryle and Kara maintained their friendship and Daryle's most treasured community project is Brightway Center. Daryle was one of the "original four" called by Kara to realize his dream for the Brightway Center. Though Daryle has been involved as a board member since incorporation, he took on the responsibility of President and CEO in September of 2009. His strong background in business management, his knowledge and experience in sports, his deep Christian faith, and his total commitment to Brightway's mission provide him with the right qualifications to lead this organization to a successful future.
