One Thing I Know

“Uncertainty” would be the best way to describe our situation lately. I’m sure all of you feel somewhat the same. It’s hard to plan. It’s hard to predict, and it’s certainly hard to know for sure. Jennifer and I have so many feelings about what’s happening in the world that it’s hard to put into words.

But, there is “One Thing I Know”. God is in control. In a strange way, we have had to depend upon the daily guidance of God more in the last 4 months than ever before. As missionaries to a country that you are not allowed to travel to, even when you want to be there more than anywhere else in the world, I’m not sure the word “frustration” is strong enough to describe how we feel. But, at the same time, there is peace in knowing that we can’t control our immediate future; only God can. And so we will wait upon the Lord.

Praise God For The Faithful, Trained Leadership in Nicaragua

One solace we have during all the uncertainty is the fact that the two works we started in Estelí are being led by the leaders we trained over the past 3 years.

As a missionary in a country working day in and day out with people to disciple them and train them, there is always the thought, “Are these people getting it?” Or maybe the better question would be, “Are we training them correctly? Is what I’m dedicating my life to making a real difference?”

If this unplanned absence from our ministry in Nicaragua has showed us anything, it has showed us that God’s Word truly will not return to Him void. Each day we are encouraged by the faithfulness and hard work of the people we have trained in Estelí, Nicaragua. We hear reports daily of the two churches in Estelí continuing to minister to each other, and their communities!

And we want you to know that none of it would be occurring without your partnership. Thank you for sending us as your missionaries to Nicaragua. Thank you so much for having the confidence in us to evangelize, disciple, and train Nicaraguans. Because of your faithful support and prayers, we can testify that Missions truly works!

Please keep all our people in Nicaragua in your prayers. Not only the churches in Estelí that God has allowed us to plant, but all the other Familia Avance churches around the country. Pray for the Pastors and Leaders who are continuing the work without any of our missionary team present. These people are the true heroes. They need your sacrificial giving and unwavering prayer support in these difficult times. Thank you for being a part of Team Kennedys2Nicaragua!
