THOUGHTS ON THE JOURNEY

It seems like every January I write the same article. In a sense, it is a “New Year, New You,” type of article. Of course, the New Year is a great time to look at our lives and set some goals for the year ahead. All of us have changes we would like to make, and why not try and get a fresh start in a fresh year. However, this year I have a specific challenge for you.

Over the last two years, or so, our lives have been turned upside down by the Coronavirus. Our economy has been impacted. People’s jobs have been impacted. The way we buy groceries has been impacted. Basically, all of the fundamental things that make up our lives as we know them have been impacted. We have been forced to accept new norms and new ways of doing things.

So, here is the challenge: As many of the things that used to make up our comfort zone have been taken away, what does the future look like? I am not talking about the future that comes at us and is beyond our control. I am talking about that piece of the future we can control. Maybe, over the last two years, many of the things that we thought were so important have been revealed as not so important. Maybe we have had to reevaluate what really matters and what is of real importance.

So, looking ahead, how do we make sure that we are building a future for ourselves that honors God? How do we make sure that we are rebuilding a future based on things that really matter? How do we press into new territory with new perspective? I hope that you are making these things a matter of prayer. Hopefully, this morning’s message will help you as you seek to answer some of these questions.

Honored to be your pastor,

DARRELL

2. God’s current _____ is not unattached from what he has done previously (vs. 2b-4).
3. When seeking God’s will, we will often have to be _____ and _____ (vs. 5-9).
4. There is a _____ and _____ for things to be revealed (vs. 10-13).
