

Podcasts for Kids & Tweens

Wow in the World

Hosts Guy Raz & Mindy Thomas takes a hilarious and light-hearted approach to topics that are currently being discussed - and discovered - by scientists. Adults will enjoy this one as much as the kiddos.

Story Pirates

If the idea of a bunch of actors, comedians and improvisers taking on the challenge of a story written by kids sounds like a good way to get your silly on, you will love Story Pirates. When you're needing a break from story time duties and also want to avoid screen time, this one is the perfect antidote.

Short & Curly

Odd name aside, this podcast is perfect for kiddos that love to pose challenging questions or think up oddball scenarios to understand the world around them. This podcast takes ethical questions to real school kids and presents the topics in a fun and engaging way. Get your debating skills ready though, because this podcast helps develop empathy and critical thinking skills for all ages.

The Past & the Curious

The popularity of Lin Manuel Miranda's Hamilton has brought on a whole new generation of history lovers. Keep your future historians engaged with this quirky podcast. The Past and the Curious takes a humorous approach to telling little-known stories from history.

Stuff You Should Know

While not actually intended for kids, this one is perfect for more precocious kiddos and tweens. Taking on a wide range of topics from the inane to the mind-blowing, the hosts will entertain old and young alike on car rides or stir-crazy quarantine days.

Sesame Street Podcast

I know! It blew our minds too! Everyone's favorite monsters have jumped into the digital age feet-first with a podcast geared towards the youngest set. Nip "are we there yet?" questions in the bud with this engaging and educational distraction.

The Unexplainable Disappearance of Mars Patel

Whether you grew up on The Goonies, or you have a kid that keeps asking when they will be old enough to watch Stranger Things; this podcast will have you wondering when Season 2 will come out, right along with us. Gripping and suspenseful, this mystery focusing on middle schoolers searching for their missing friends will have you hooked and binge-listening right along with your tweens.

The Allusionist

The hilarious Helen Zaltzman takes us through self-proclaimed linguistic adventures. Bookworms, curious minds, and future writers will especially love this entertaining podcast about words, language, and grammar.